Welcome Back

Dear Parents:

As you may be aware, peanut and peanut related allergies can put children with nut allergies at serious risk and can even be life threatening. For years, our school staff has made accommodations for students with life threatening allergies and we will continue to do so with peanut-free tables and classrooms. If your child does suffer from any type of food allergy, please be sure to clearly communicate your child's situation with the school nurse and your child's teacher as well. If your child does have a life-threatening allergy, a health care plan will be put in place to identify signs and symptoms of the allergy as well as how we will respond to an allergic reaction.

Should your child's classmate have a food allergy, you will be notified by your child's classroom teacher in advance. If you plan on donating snacks and/or treats for a classroom celebration, your child's teacher will provide you with the information you will need to send in a food item.

If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact your child's school principal. Thank you for your support and your understanding that our student's health and safety comes as our first priority.
